Human ecology is an interdisciplinary and transdisciplinary study of the relationship between humans and their natural, social, and built environments. The philosophy and study of human ecology has a diffuse history with advancements in ecology, geography, sociology, psychology, anthropology, zoology, epidemiology, public health, and home economics, among others.

Parasitology is the study of parasites, their hosts, and the relationship between them. As a biological discipline, the scope of parasitology is not determined by the organism or environment in question but by their way of life. This means it forms a synthesis of other disciplines, and draws on techniques from fields such as cell biology, bioinformatics, biochemistry, molecular biology ...

The Lake Ecology section is intended to provide a general background to Lake Access by introducing the basic concepts necessary to understand how lake ecosystems function. It is divided into three general sections shown above, which describe the fundamental physical, chemical, and biological characteristics of lakes. While there is a logical sequence to the chapters shown in the index, each ...

Alexander F. Skutch, in his A Naturalist in Costa Rica (1971), encouraged his readers, writing, "To know the forest, we must study it in all aspects, as birds soaring above its roof, as earth-bound bipeds creeping slowly over its roots." Until recently, our perspective on forest ecology was ground-based and clueless about canopy processes. Only during the past 15 years has our ...
